

MOST did it silently

in the bedroom while others stretched out across the living room floor. A few preferred the comfort of the overstuffed chair in the den and many wanted the more formal setting of their dining room table. Some liked the music blaring through a dimly lit room, while others preferred to do it with all the lights on and snacks available.

Home-work habits varied from person to person. Many personal habits for students tended to reflect the same or at least similar tastes.

"My only real habits are eating a snack and having my music playing in the background," said Senior Clorisa Roller. These seemed to be the most popular habits among students.

However, a few enjoyed peace and quiet for their studying. Senior Samantha Randall stated, "I prefer to have no noise or food while I work."

While the way students worked helped to improve their skills, the place they went to study also played an important role.

"I sit at the dining room table so that I can concentrate a little better," said

Sophomore Melissa Schiflett.

Freshman Jessica Clasby stated, "I like to just go and sit on my bed to do mine."

Although the habits may have varied and the reasons for doing it might have been different, the goal stayed the same--JUST GET IT DONE!

.....
Knowing he can't take the computer home with him, Shannon Beach works to keep from having homework.

SO... How do you do it?

by Sabine Poston

